

Volunteer Opportunities

Below is a list of clinics and other organizations that utilize medical volunteers. Shown first are national networks that maintain searchable online databases of free clinics. Following the national networks, is a list of opportunities and clinics that are specifically seeking rheumatology volunteers.

The opportunities available may include providing direct patient care, or in-person and virtual consultations with primary care providers. In some cases, opportunities may include teaching and providing support to non-rheumatology providers. Contact information for a representative from each organization is provided to allow interested volunteers to learn more.

This list is not exhaustive. The clinics shown below responded to an ACR survey inquiring about their rheumatology volunteer needs. If you are a representative from a clinic or other organization that is seeking rheumatology volunteers and would like to be added to this list, or an ACR/ARP member with a clinic you suggest we contact, please email VERA@Rheumatology.org.

The volunteer opportunities presented here are provided by the American College of Rheumatology (ACR) as an informational resource for rheumatology health professionals. The listing is not meant to be exhaustive and ACR does not benefit financially from linking to these organizations or have a relationship with them. The ACR is not responsible for the information contained on pages of these websites. It is the responsibility of the individual to contact the organization of interest to learn more about potential volunteer opportunities.

Please visit <https://www.rheumatology.org/About-Us/Newsroom/Website-Privacy-Policies> to view ACR's policies regarding privacy, internal and external linking, and copyright and disclaimer issues.
